Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Finances of Sir John Kynnersley I m sorry, sir. I m sure you ve always been the prefect gentlemen to me, but I as my horders, Sir John, and sorry though I ham to say it, they must be executed. And those horders, Sir John - given to me in writing, Sir John - say as plain as they can that unless you pay hup at once you must please go. And in self-defence the man (the caretaker of the building) held out for the young baronet s inspection the letter of instructions he had that morning received from his employer. You know, Sir John, there s three quarters rent owing, he continued in an apologetic tone. The young man laughed quietly - it was a bitter, cynical laugh, and it was a supercilious laugh - but his only reply was: Oh, hell to that for a tale! I Tell your people I m not going. You know, Bunting, he added deliberately, you couldn t put me out; and he laughed again, showing his...
